Trusts & Estates News Article:

Structuring and Restructuring Interests in Trusts

Modern irrevocable trusts often require restructuring to adapt to changing laws and family circumstances, yet achieving this is technically complex. Planners must navigate intricate transfer-tax rules where even hard-to-value discretionary interests retain significance, and beneficiary silence can be deemed a taxable gift. While tools like decanting and powers of appointment provide pathways for modification, they carry risks if beneficiary consent shifts beneficial interests.

Recent IRS guidance highlights that adding tax-reimbursement clauses with beneficiary acquiescence can trigger gift taxes. Consequently, trustee-driven or court-ordered modifications are typically preferred over beneficiary-driven actions to minimize adverse tax exposure.

Helpful hint of the week:

Correctly valuing mutual funds for estate tax when the valuation date falls on a weekend

People are sometimes surprised we are only reporting the Friday price instead of the Monday and Friday prices they are expecting. Here is the IRS regulation we follow: [IRS Reg. 20.2031-8(3)(b)] For open ended investment companies (commonly known as mutual funds) the fair market price is the public redemption price on the valuation date. Should no price be available for that date, the price used will be the price for the first day preceding the valuation date.
